Tonight of the Living Dead is a dark ambient re-imagining of George Romero's 1968 horror classic Night of the Living Dead, by Pimalia recording artists 400 Lonely Things - who have used treated, hypnotic samples of the original film as the only ingredients in their composition. Since its release, Tonight of the Living Dead has been widely embraced by the horror community both for its respectful approach and creepy atmospherics, even earning an endorsement by the star of the original film, Judith O'Dea.

While the album wouldn't be out of place in a haunted house, its thoughtful instrumental construction, meditative qualities, and sorrowful mood keep it from becoming a novelty item as the press has pointed out. Tonight of the Living Dead was given a four-page article in Scars Magazine, a full page feature in the August issue of Rue Morgue magazine, and has been written up in most major horror sites, numerous horror blogs and film related podcasts.

Recently, 400 Lonely Things teamed up with film-maker Phil Harrell to create a music video for one of its tracks using the same techniques employed in the composition of the album. Phil Harrell is also working closely with the editor of Rusty Nails' documentary Dead On: The Life and Cinema of George A. Romero, currently in production.

"Fascinating CD. I found the album very memory invoking. Listening to Tonight of the Living Dead was like musically leaping back in time to relive all the nuances of my character Barbra's struggle to survive all the horrific night terrors forced on her in Night of the Living Dead... a soul searching CD."
